Preamble of the scientific symposium:

Sport has always been a powerful tool for communication between peoples and for promoting common human values.

Sport in Algeria has played a pivotal role in consolidating national identity and strengthening the revolutionary spirit since the beginning of the struggle for independence.

During the blessed Liberation Revolution (1954-1962), sports were not just a recreational activity, but rather became a means of defending the national cause on the international scene. By organizing sports teams that carried Algeria's colors, there were strong diplomatic messages sent to the world in support of Algeria's struggle for independence.

The FLN football team, which was founded on April 13, 1958, was a prominent example of the use of sport as a diplomatic tool during the revolution. While the Algerian people were facing French colonialism on the battlefields, the sports team was touring the stadiums of the world to introduce and internationalize the Algerian cause, and were the best ambassadors to express the nation's aspirations for freedom and independence.

This team was not only a sporting representative, but it was also a political and diplomatic representative, which reflects the desire of the Algerian people to achieve national sovereignty and dignity.

After independence, Algerian sport continued to play its role in improving Algeria's image internationally. By participating in world championships and organizing major sporting events, sport has become a means of strengthening international relations and promoting the human values that the Algerian revolution carried within it, such as justice, freedom and equality.

Algerian sports diplomacy is today a continuation of this mission, which began with the blessed liberation and its strives to enable young people to contribute to the construction of bridges of communication and peace with the peoples of the world. Through sport, Algeria is able to assert its position as a country favorable to peace and development, drawing on the heritage of the glorious revolution, which promotes the values of unity and resistance for just causes.

This affair prompted us, as the people of this beloved country and as academics, researchers, managers and experts of the Algerian sports system, to reflect on the organization of this national scientific conference, through which we wanted to participate with our beloved Algeria in its seventieth anniversary of the outbreak of the blessed Algerian liberation revolution. This also created a basis for reflection, exchange and dialogue around the relaunch and strengthening of Algerian sports diplomacy through the following axes of research.
